Hello, I am not a professor or doctor, but I do have some direct information because of exposure. One group, one big group of men and women that can give you some first hand information on the effects of asbestos, is the US Veterans. First, get the Department of the Navy to finally admit that asbestos was used on every ship, submarine, and probably plane. Then just offer Veterans that served on ships, submarine and probably planes, to e-mail you about the effects they have from the asbestos and where did they inhale these asbestos fibers. You start these men and women to thinking about this and before you know the men and women in the shipyards and factories who built these ships, submarines and probably planes will e-mail and talk about where they used asbestos and maybe where the asbestos material was made or shipped from. As you see, you can start a downhill roll of information that can lead back to when asbestos was known to be harmful, and a list of effects that can be mathamatically worked down to a strong list of effects, a strong list of where is was shipped from and a strong list of why this is still showing up in manufacturing today.

Just a suggetion!!!!
